

PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Our Approach

Social, emotional, and cultural development has always been vital for learning and achievement. But over the past two years, the COVID pandemic has highlighted the importance of 'context' as a guiding force for addressing how we can re-imagine teaching and learning through a social, emotional, and cultural lens.

The Center for Reaching & Teaching the Whole Child is a leader in helping educators at all stages of the career continuum work in ways that are culturally responsive, socially aware, and emotionally intelligent.

By weaving together social-emotional skills and culturally responsive teaching practices, we have identified seven anchor competencies that are foundational to an equitable education that enable all students to achieve and educators and students to flourish. Rather than providing another add-on program, our framework is a roadmap that builds upon and enhances existing practice.

What We Offer

Our Professional Development Educator Institute is highly interactive and tailored to the needs of participants in various educational positions. We bring together networks of educators for a yearlong collaborative learning experience to develop social, emotional, and cultural competence and embed it into the fabric of schools.

We work with educators at every stage of the professional development pipeline including:

- Beginning teachers
- Induction mentors, teacher coaches, cooperating teachers
- Veteran teachers
- Administrators
- Teacher educators (university faculty, supervisors)

Whether teaching online or in person, you will learn how to apply our proven Social, Emotional, and Cultural Anchor Competencies Framework to:

- Address our current context (having the difficult conversations) in the classroom
- Respond to the academic needs of students within this current context
- Support the well-being of teachers and students
- Build trusting relationships
